Explanations

SAMPLE

1. What is the main sentiment towards discussing advice with the lawyer?

A. frustration with the lack of advice

B. disappointment in the lawyer's judgment

C. agreement with the lawyer's opinions

D. willingness to seek new advice

The sentiment expressed in the context of discussing advice with the lawyer is related to disappointment in the lawyer's judgment. This implies that the advice provided has not met the expectations or needs of the individual seeking counsel. It suggests that there might have been an instance where the lawyer's guidance was not seen as adequate or effective, leading to feelings of letdown regarding the lawyer's skills or knowledge. In contrast, feelings of frustration with a lack of advice indicate an expectation for more communication or guidance rather than disappointment in what has already been given. Agreement with the lawyer's opinions suggests a positive reception of the advice shared, which does not align with disappointment. Furthermore, a willingness to seek new advice implies an openness to alternative perspectives rather than expressing dissatisfaction with the current advice. Thus, the answer identifying disappointment reflects a more nuanced sentiment focused on the perceived quality of judgment from the lawyer.

2. How can the requirement to finish an assignment by Friday be phrased using "must"?

A. You should complete the assignment by Friday

B. You must complete the assignment by Friday

C. You could complete the assignment by Friday

D. You have to complete the assignment by Friday

The phrasing that uses "must" effectively conveys a strong obligation or requirement to complete the assignment by Friday. When someone says, "You must complete the assignment by Friday," it clearly indicates that this is a non-negotiable requirement, emphasizing the necessity of finishing the task by that deadline. In contrast, the other options present varying degrees of obligation or advice. For example, suggesting "should" implies a recommendation rather than an obligation, while "could" indicates a possibility rather than a requirement. The phrase "have to" expresses a strong obligation as well, but it typically reflects an external necessity rather than a direct command. Hence, "must" is specific in its intensity and urgency, making it the most appropriate choice for this context.

3. What type of service did Sue seek for her house?

A. She wanted to renovate her house.

B. She asked for painters only.

C. She had professionals to repair and decorate.

D. She managed the repairs by herself.

The selection of that option indicates that Sue was looking for comprehensive assistance for her house, involving both repairs and decoration, suggesting that she wanted to enhance her home with the help of experts. This choice emphasizes that she engaged professionals who possess the skills and expertise necessary to perform multiple tasks related to home improvement. The other options reflect different approaches that someone might take when addressing their home's needs. For instance, simply wanting to renovate implies a broader scope that might not include immediate repairs or decoration. Asking for only painters suggests a limited service focused solely on aesthetics, overlooking structural or repair issues. Managing repairs by herself indicates a DIY approach that suggests lack of professional assistance, which is contrary to the notion of seeking help that option C conveys. Selecting option C correctly encompasses a more complete understanding of Sue's intent to utilize professional services for both repair and decoration of her house.

4. Which phrase correctly conveys a tendency of someone's punctuality?

A. He is always late

B. He tends to be late

C. He might be late

D. He has been late

The phrase "He tends to be late" accurately indicates a habitual tendency regarding someone's punctuality. By using the expression "tends to," it suggests that being late is a recurring behavior for this person rather than a one-time occurrence. This phrasing captures the idea that their lateness is a consistent pattern, rather than a possibility or a confirmed instance. In contrast, "He is always late" implies a certainty about the person's habitual lateness without accounting for any exceptions. "He might be late" suggests uncertainty and doesn't affirm a definitive pattern of behavior. Similarly, "He has been late" refers to specific past instances without conveying that lateness is a tendency or behavior that can be expected in the future. This distinction is key in interpreting the nature of the person's punctuality in a nuanced way.

5. What did I apologize for regarding my comments about your sister?

A. repeating my words

B. what I should have said

C. taking back my words

D. my misunderstanding

The choice of "taking back my words" accurately reflects the context of an apology regarding comments that were previously made about someone's sister. When someone apologizes for something they said, it often implies that they wish to retract or negate the impact of those comments, indicating regret over having expressed them in the first place. This phrase encapsulates the idea of wanting to undo the previous statements that may have caused offense or hurt. In contrast, the other choices do not quite capture the nuance of the situation. "Repeating my words" would imply a focus on the act of restating rather than regret, while "what I should have said" suggests a desire to correct or improve the original comments without explicitly taking responsibility for the previous statement. "My misunderstanding" points to a lack of clarity or a misjudgment but does not inherently convey an apology for the comments themselves. Thus, "taking back my words" aligns closely with the intention behind the apologies typically expressed in such contexts.

6. What phrase should be used to emphasize attention while writing an essay?

A. take little care

B. take more care

C. ignore care

D. give less attention

When writing an essay, the phrase "take more care" is particularly effective in emphasizing the need to focus on details and considerations. This phrase suggests an active approach to writing, where the writer acknowledges the importance of being meticulous and attentive to the nuances of their argument, structure, and language. By using "take more care," the writer conveys the idea that thoroughness and diligence are required to enhance the quality of the work. In contrast, the other options imply a lack of attention or a decrease in effort, which would not align with the goal of producing a well-crafted essay. "Take little care," "ignore care," and "give less attention" all suggest a sense of negligence or inadequacy, which would undermine the writer's purpose of engaging the audience and conveying their points effectively. Therefore, "take more care" stands out as the most appropriate expression for emphasizing the importance of attentiveness in essay writing.

7. What could you say about the phrase regarding CIAM's ranking?

A. is ranked as the worst

B. is ranked highly

C. is generally below average

D. is second to none

The phrase "is second to none" conveys a strong sentiment that CIAM's ranking is the highest possible, indicating that no other entity is superior to it. This expression emphasizes that CIAM stands out at the top, suggesting excellence and unrivaled quality in comparison to others. In this context, this phrase effectively communicates that CIAM holds a preeminent position within its field or category, reinforcing the idea of being the best possible option. This is significant because it not only highlights CIAM's status but does so in a manner that resonates positively with the audience, suggesting confidence and superiority. Other choices, while they use varying adjectives to discuss ranking, do not convey a similar level of esteem or superiority. For example, mentioning "the worst," "below average," or even being "ranked highly" implies a relative comparison but does not capture the unmatched or unparalleled status that "second to none" effectively conveys.

8. How can you express a lack of memory about bringing your wallet?

A. I have no memory of bringing my wallet.

B. I forgot to bring my wallet.

C. I lost my wallet yesterday.

D. I am thinking about my wallet.

The correct answer effectively conveys a specific lack of recollection regarding whether or not the wallet was brought. Saying, "I have no memory of bringing my wallet," directly addresses the situation by indicating that there is no conscious memory or awareness of the action in question, which is bringing the wallet. This phrasing clearly communicates uncertainty about past actions, emphasizing the absence of memory as the key point. It distances the speaker from the action of bringing the wallet, rather than suggesting it was forgotten or misplaced. By using a precise wording that focuses solely on the memory aspect, it eliminates ambiguity. Other options, while related to the wallet, do not directly address the question about memory. One suggests forgetting, indicating a conscious decision not to bring it, while another states that the wallet is lost, implying it was once present but is currently missing. The last option shifts focus entirely to thinking about the wallet, which does not relate to the action of bringing it.

9. Which phrase best describes the situation about traffic delays?

A. were possibly held

B. were probably held

C. were certainly delayed

D. were likely to be held

The phrase "were probably held" accurately conveys a sense of uncertainty about the traffic delays while suggesting a strong likelihood that they occurred. This indicates that there is reasonable evidence or indications leading to the conclusion that delays did happen, but the degree of certainty is not absolute. In contrast, the other options lack the same balance of likelihood and tentativeness. For example, "were likely to be held" implies potential future delays rather than past ones, which doesn't fit the context. "Were certainly delayed" presents a definitive assertion, which does not account for any uncertainties or variations that might have caused the traffic situation. Meanwhile, "were possibly held" is too vague and weak, lacking the degree of assurance needed to accurately describe that delays were likely. By choosing "were probably held," it captures the expected situation about traffic delays, reflecting the nuances involved when discussing such outcomes in a more factual narrative.

10. What did Nick suggest about salt intake?

A. increasing it is beneficial

B. reducing it is unnecessary

C. we should cut down on it

D. it should be avoided entirely

The answer highlights a recommendation regarding salt intake that aligns with current health guidelines. Suggesting that "we should cut down on it" indicates that lowering salt consumption is seen as a proactive approach to maintaining overall health. This aligns with many health organizations' advice, as excessive salt intake is linked to various health issues, including hypertension and cardiovascular diseases. Hence, the suggestion to reduce salt illustrates a common consensus that moderation is key, rather than an extreme stance either in favor of increased intake or total avoidance. Other options either advocate for increasing salt, which contradicts widely accepted health recommendations, or suggest that reducing salt is unnecessary, which does not consider the potential health benefits of lowering intake. Avoiding salt entirely is also not a realistic or balanced approach, as salt does have important functions in the body when consumed in moderation. Thus, the emphasis on cutting down strikes a practical balance.
