1. Which statement best describes the duties related to burial and disposition for funeral directors?

A. Direct and supervise funerals, burials, cremations or dispositions of the dead

B. Only embalm the deceased

C. Only arrange funerals

D. Only supervise cremations

Directing and supervising funerals and the processes of burial, cremation, or other dispositions covers the full range of a funeral director's responsibilities. This means guiding not only the ceremonies themselves but also the actual disposition of the remains, including coordinating logistics with cemeteries and crematories, ensuring proper handling, transportation, and care of the body, and taking care of all required documentation and legal authorizations. The role also includes safeguarding the dignity of the deceased, maintaining the chain of custody, and supervising staff and procedures from start to finish so everything complies with laws and standards. Embalming is just one service offered, arranging a funeral is part of the work, and supervising cremations is only one method of disposition. The best statement reflects the complete duty to oversee all aspects of burial and disposition, not just a single component.

2. Under NRS 642.0195, lapsing on child support payments can result in which consequence regarding professional licensure

A. Criminal charges

B. Suspension of license.

C. Revocation of passport

D. Community service

Under Nevada law, failing to pay court-ordered child support can trigger administrative actions against a professional license. NRS 642.0195 authorizes suspending a license if the licensee is in arrears, making suspension the direct consequence related to licensure. This mechanism is designed to encourage compliance with support orders and ensure that obligations are met. Other options like criminal charges or passport revocation aren't the licensure remedy described in this statute, and while nonpayment can have other legal consequences in different contexts, the licensure-specific outcome here is suspension.

3. What may occur if remains are not picked up within 30 days?

A. A holding fee may be charged and remains held for 2 years

B. They are immediately disposed of

C. The family loses rights to the remains

D. The facility must return them to the hospital

When remains are not picked up within the stated period, facilities typically establish a process to recover their costs and ensure proper handling. The main concept here is that a holding (storage) fee may be charged to cover the ongoing costs of keeping the remains, and the remains can be held for a defined period—often up to two years—while efforts to contact the family continue and arrangements are considered. This framing recognizes that the facility has to plan and allocate space and resources, and it gives a clear, regulated window for eventual disposition under applicable laws. Immediate disposal or loss of rights does not occur in this scenario, and returning the remains to the hospital would require a separate, specific procedure or legal basis.

4. What is the price for change renewal of license?

A. $200

B. $150

C. $225

D. $250

Understanding the fee for renewal when changes are involved: the amount charged for a change renewal is the standard renewal fee set by the licensing authority, which is $200. This is the price you pay to renew the license and update any information on the license record. The other figures typically reflect different services or timing (such as standard renewal or late/special fees) and aren't applicable to a renewal that simply involves updating information. If you're preparing for the exam, remember to check the current fee schedule, since exact amounts can change over time.

5. Which option best describes the secretary's duties on the NV Funeral Board

A. Records of all meetings.

B. A registrar of names, residence address, business address of all persons duly licensed—open to public examination at all times.

C. None.

D. Both A and B

The secretary on a regulatory board handles both keeping official meeting records and maintaining the public licensee registry, because these tasks support clear governance and accountability. Recording the records of all meetings—minutes, agendas, attendance, votes, and actions—creates an official history of what the board did and decided, which can be reviewed later by members, licensees, and the public. Maintaining a registrar of all licensed funeral professionals—names, residential and business addresses—ensures there's an up-to-date, verifiable list that the public can check for license status and contact information. The phrase that this registry is open to public examination reinforces the transparency essential to consumer protection. Together, these duties ensure the board's decisions are documented and licensees are readily verifiable, providing both internal governance and external accountability.

6. Can you have a funeral in a home or other chosen location?

A. No, funerals must be conducted only in a funeral home.

B. Yes, but only for viewing.

C. Yes, upon authorization a funeral director may have services at a home or other location.

D. Yes, but only with a court order.

Having a funeral in a home or another chosen location is allowed when a licensed funeral director authorizes and supervises the service. The director's role is to coordinate the venue, ensure proper handling and transport of the remains, and make sure all legal and regulatory requirements (permits, notifications, privacy, safety) are met at the site. The key is the authorization and professional oversight, which makes non-traditional venues permissible while keeping the service compliant and respectfully conducted. This isn't restricted to a funeral home, and it isn't limited to viewing only. A court order isn't needed—the arrangement hinges on the funeral director's approval and coordination.

7. On the Nv Funeral and Cemetery Board, how many members must be not affiliated with the funeral business?

A. Two

B. Three

C. Four

D. Five

Having independent oversight is essential in a regulatory board. When a body includes members who aren't connected to the funeral business, it preserves a consumer-focused perspective and helps prevent industry influence from swaying decisions. On the Nevada Funeral and Cemetery Board, three members must be not affiliated with the funeral business. This arrangement ensures there is a solid public or consumer voice alongside the licensed professionals who sit on the board. The mix supports fair licensing decisions, disciplinary actions, and standard-setting. If fewer than three members were non-affiliated, the board could lean more heavily toward industry perspective; more than three could dilute the professional expertise needed to regulate effectively.

8. How long are price lists kept on record?

A. 6 months

B. 1 year

C. 2 years

D. 5 years

Keeping price lists on record for one year provides a verifiable history of pricing that regulators can review and consumers can reference if questions or disputes arise. This retention period supports transparency by allowing audits to compare advertised prices with what was charged over a reasonable timeframe, while not imposing unnecessary storage burdens. Six months is often too short to cover typical inquiry or complaint cycles, and storing for two or five years adds more than what's needed for regulatory purposes. So the standard requirement is one year.

9. If cremated remains have not been claimed by the agent, the operator of a crematory may dispose of the remains after how many months?

A. 12

B. 6

C. 24

D. 36

Unclaimed cremated remains have a defined holding period before disposal is allowed. The operator may dispose of the remains after 24 months if the agent who has the authority to claim them has not done so. This two-year timeframe gives family members or designated agents a reasonable window to arrange retrieval while preventing ashes from remaining in limbo indefinitely. Shorter periods would rush families and create more disputes, while longer periods would tie up space and resources unnecessarily. In practice, the operator should have made reasonable efforts to contact the agent and documented those attempts before proceeding with disposal.

10. What is the time frame to issue a burial permit after death?

A. 24 hours

B. 48 hours

C. 72 hours

D. 96 hours

The main point is that a burial permit is a legal document you obtain after the death is officially recorded. The standard timeframe you'll often see is within 72 hours (three days). This window allows time to certify the death, file the death certificate, and complete any required investigations or delays, such as an autopsy or coroner review, before the permit can authorize removal and burial. In uncomplicated cases, the permit can be issued within about three days; shorter periods like a day or two are usually not feasible due to the necessary paperwork, and longer delays are only expected if investigations hold things up.
