1. Which term describes individuals who are absorbed by their phones, ignoring their surroundings?

A. Cellphone zombies

B. Tech enthusiasts

C. Screen watchers

D. Bag phone users

The idea being tested is a slang label for people who are so absorbed by their phones that they ignore their surroundings. Cellphone zombies nails this best because it uses a vivid metaphor: zombies evoke a trance-like, mindless state, while the word cellphone pins the fixation to the device. The combination clearly communicates not just being glued to a screen, but doing so in a way that interrupts awareness of the outside world. It's a widely understood, punchy way to describe this behavior, often with a playful yet critical tone. The other terms don't fit as well. Tech enthusiasts usually imply positive interest or expertise, not mindless distraction. Screen watchers is more neutral and less colloquial, lacking the strong imagery. Bag phone users is outdated and refers to a type of device rather than the behavior of being engrossed in a screen.

2. Which elements link the two timelines as recurring motifs?

A. The graphic novel and Shakespeare

B. The weather and geography

C. The color palette

D. The food choices

Recurring motifs across the two timelines are elements that carry meaning from the pre collapse world into the post collapse world, acting as throughlines that remind characters and readers of what remains important. The graphic novel created by Miranda and Shakespeare's plays performed by the Traveling Symphony fit this idea best. The graphic novel travels with characters into the post collapse era, serving as a tangible connection to the life and imagination that existed before the disaster. It embodies memory, identity, and hope, showing that storytelling and art endure even in hardship. Shakespeare's works operate in the same way: they are shared cultural touchstones that communities encounter and perform across time, linking strangers and reinforcing a sense of shared civilization. Weather and geography describe settings rather than throughlines that consistently appear as motifs across both eras. The color palette is a stylistic detail, not a recurring symbol that ties the timelines together. Food choices reflect survival conditions but don't function as a unifying motif across the eras in the same explicit, symbolic way. So, the graphic novel and Shakespeare are the elements that most clearly link the two timelines as recurring motifs.

3. What is Jeevan Chaudhary's role at the time he helps Arthur?

A. An emergency medical technician in training

B. A paparazzo

C. A stagehand

D. A physician

He is depicted as someone who is in training to be an emergency medical technician. When Arthur Leander collapses on stage, Jeevan Chaudhary steps in using his EMT training to try to save him—correcting breathing, checking for a pulse, and coordinating with others for medical help. This moment is shown as him actively applying life-saving skills while still a student or trainee, not a fully licensed physician. The other roles don't fit the scene at that moment (he's not acting as a stagehand or a physician, though he has a background as a photographer). So, the best description of his role at that exact time is an emergency medical technician in training.

4. Who is with Arthur Leander when he collapses on stage?

A. Mira

B. Clark

C. Jeevan Chaudhary

D. The Prophet

The moment tests your memory of a key early scene and how it shapes a character's path. Arthur Leander collapses on stage during a Toronto production of King Lear, and the person with him is Jeevan Chaudhary. Jeevan is in the theater and acts quickly, assisting Arthur and calling for help, a sequence that anchors his later transformation into a caretaker figure in the story. This detail matters because it links Arthur's world to Jeevan's future role in the broader narrative, illustrating how ordinary choices in moments of crisis ripple outward. Mira, Clark, and The Prophet are important figures in the broader story, but they aren't the person present with Arthur at that collapse. Mira is connected to Arthur later in different capacities, Clark is a friend who becomes involved in the post-crisis world, and The Prophet is a figure who emerges after the collapse.

5. Which city was Clark's flight originally bound for before Severn City grounded him?

A. Toronto.

B. Montreal.

C. New York.

D. Vancouver.

Understanding where Clark's flight was headed before Severn City grounded him anchors his pre-collapse life to a real place, showing how ordinary travel plans were interrupted by the catastrophe. The narrative specifies that the plane was bound for Toronto, which sits in Ontario and explains why Clark ends up grounded in Severn City—his destination becomes unreachable as the crisis shuts down air travel. This detail also helps map the survivors' geography, highlighting how Severn City serves as a refuge within reach of major Canadian cities. The other cities listed aren't named as his intended destination in the text, so Toronto is the correct reference.

6. What best describes the items found in the Museum of Civilization?

A. Items from before the collapse that still function.

B. Items from before the collapse that no longer work.

C. Modern artifacts created after the collapse.

D. Artifacts from various distant cultures.

The main idea here is that the Museum of Civilization is a repository of relics from before the collapse, kept to remember a lost world rather than to use as working tools. In the story, these objects survived into the post-collapse era but aren't usable anymore, serving as cultural memory of what civilization once produced and relied on. That's why the best description is items from before the collapse that no longer work—they function as reminders of the past rather than practical artifacts. The other options don't fit as well. Items from before the collapse that still function would be rare in a world where technology and infrastructure have degraded, so that label wouldn't capture the museum's purpose. Modern artifacts created after the collapse aren't what the museum collects, since its focus is on what existed before. Artifacts from various distant cultures isn't the defining feature either—the emphasis is on relics from the pre-collapse civilization as a whole, not a broad cultural catalog.

7. What happens at the golf course?

A. They discover a functioning hospital with supplies.

B. They encounter a large convoy of survivors and join them.

C. Kirsten and August loot it, but when they emerge they realize they lost the symphony and must travel on their own.

D. It becomes a sanctuary where they settle permanently.

The main idea being tested is a specific event in the Traveling Symphony arc: what happens when Kirsten and August encounter a golf course and how it affects their path. At the golf course they raid the clubhouse for supplies, hoping to stock up for the road. They emerge with what they need, but in the scramble they realize they've lost the symphony—the traveling troupe's sense of unity and the show itself. Without that connection and the support of the group, Kirsten and August are forced to continue their journey on their own. This moment shows how a single salvage act can fracture a group and push characters to rely on themselves, rather than the safety and purpose the troupe provides.

8. Which of the following is NOT identified as essential to surviving disaster in the book?

A. Scientific progress alone

B. Art and memory

C. Community and storytelling

D. Human connection

Survival after disaster in the book hinges on art, memory, community, and human connection rather than science alone. The story shows that keeping culture alive through art and storytelling helps people hold onto their identities and hope, even when technology and institutions have collapsed. The traveling symphony and other acts become lifelines—ways to remember what was lost and to find meaning in the present. Community and storytelling knit people together, creating networks of mutual aid and shared rituals that sustain resilience during hardship. Human connection—trusted friends, neighbors, and found families—provides support, empathy, and purpose that pure technical skill can't supply. Because of that, the idea that scientific progress alone is essential isn't presented as a sufficient path to surviving the disaster; it's one piece, not the whole picture.

9. In which state does Jeevan end up practicing medicine?

A. New York

B. Virginia

C. California

D. Texas

The question tests how Jeevan's professional arc and the setting of his post-crisis life come together. Jeevan moves from being an emergency responder into a physician who runs a clinic within a settled survivor community. The story places his medical practice in Virginia, which signals a shift from the chaos of the collapse to a calmer, regional role in the eastern United States. This location matters because it anchors his work in a specific, identifiable community rather than in a major city or a far-flung roaming role, and it helps distinguish his path from other characters whose journeys unfold in different places. New York, California, and Texas aren't where the narrative places him as a practicing doctor, which is why Virginia is the best answer.

10. Where does the traveling symphony go?

A. In the Great Lakes region of the US.

B. Across the southern states along the coast.

C. To the Pacific Northwest.

D. To the Gulf Coast.

The traveling symphony moves in a circuit through settlements around the Great Lakes after the collapse, using that inland corridor as its travel route. This region provides a connected set of towns and audiences that the troupe can reach, making it the practical and described path for their performances. The other regions—Pacific Northwest, Gulf Coast, and the southern coastal states—aren't depicted as their regular route in the story, so the best fit is the Great Lakes region.
