Explanations

SAMPLE

1. In which year did Phillip Castaneda face expulsion?

A. 2022

B. 2021

C. 2023

D. 2020

The key idea is to locate the exact date tied to a specific event in the narrative. In this case, the text states that Phillip Castaneda faced expulsion in 2022. That direct year reference is what anchors the expulsion to that moment, making 2022 the correct answer. To understand why, focus on the sentence that mentions expulsion and its date—the year is given there, not inferred from other events. Other years would only fit if the narrative described expulsion happening then, which the text does not. When you're unsure, find the explicit statement about the event and its year, and verify there isn't another sentence linking expulsion to a different time.

2. Which element among the following is specifically listed as part of the notes organization?

A. ContextS

B. Summary

C. Quotes

D. Chapter summaries/analyses

Summaries sit at the heart of notes organization because they distill the main ideas into a concise, quick-reference form. A good summary lets you see the big picture at a glance, making it much easier to review and recall what you studied. In a well-structured notes system, the summary acts as an anchor you can return to before you dive into more detail, such as quotes or chapter analyses. Context can be useful for background, and quotes provide exact wording, while chapter summaries/analyses add depth to specific sections. But none of those by themselves organizes everything as cleanly as a clear summary does, since the summary ties ideas together and supports easier retrieval and synthesis across topics.

3. Whose research is cited as validating ASL's neurological equivalence to spoken language?

A. Maria Lopez

B. Trevin Adams

C. Kaveh Angoorani

D. Eddie Chang

Language processing in the brain uses the same neural networks regardless of whether the language is spoken or signed. Eddie Chang's work provides clear evidence that American Sign Language engages the same left-hemisphere language regions that handle spoken language. By mapping language areas during awake brain surgery and showing that stimulating these regions disrupts ASL production and comprehension, his research demonstrates that sign language relies on the same neural architecture as spoken language. This shows that ASL is a full language not by gesture alone but through the same linguistic brain systems, confirming neurological equivalence between ASL and spoken language.

4. Thomas Fuller is described as what type of observer whose viral article brought fame, Nike sponsorship, and $43 million for CSDR facilities?

A. A passive observer whose viral article brought fame, Nike sponsorship, and $43 million for CSDR facilities

B. An active observer who influenced the team

C. A critic who opposed sponsorships

D. A sponsor who funded the facilities

When we think about observer roles, a passive observer is someone who notices and shares information without trying to steer decisions or actions. In this scenario, Thomas Fuller's viral article acted as a catalyst by spreading widely and drawing attention, which in turn attracted Nike sponsorship and a large investment in CSDR facilities. He didn't directly negotiate or push the sponsorship himself; the impact came from the article's reach and the response it provoked. That indirect chain—from observation to widespread attention to funding—fits the idea of a passive observer. The other descriptions imply direct influence, opposition, or funding responsibility, which aren't what's described here.

5. What significant achievement did the Cubs accomplish by winning the championship?

A. They claimed their first state championship.

B. They won three consecutive state titles.

C. They set a record for most points in a championship.

D. They advanced to a national tournament.

Winning a state championship, especially for the first time, is a major milestone for any program. By securing the championship, the Cubs achieve their first state title, marking the moment they reach the highest level of success within their state. This interpretation fits best because the statement describes the act of winning as the achievement, not a future streak, a scoring record, or advancement to a different competition. The other ideas—three consecutive state titles, a scoring record, or moving on to a national tournament—would require additional information beyond simply winning the championship.

6. What is the importance of sign language education according to Fuller?

A. ASL is vital for Deaf children's development, highlighting struggles with oralism

B. Sign language is optional in Deaf education

C. Oralism should be the only method taught

D. Sign language delays language development

Sign language education is crucial because it provides Deaf children with immediate access to a full, natural language, which supports their overall development from language, through cognition, to social and academic growth. Fuller argues that ASL is vital for Deaf children's development because it gives them a solid language foundation early on, rather than delaying language by relying solely on spoken-word methods. When children have access to sign language, they can think, learn, and communicate effectively, which also supports later literacy in English by building strong language skills first. The challenges associated with oral-only approaches show that trying to teach spoken language exclusively can leave gaps in language access, which Fuller highlights as a key shortcoming of that method. Therefore, sign language is not optional; it serves as a meaningful way to ensure language development, cultural belonging, and better educational outcomes for Deaf children.

7. Which player suffered a season-ending injury?

- A. Felix Gonzales
- B. Jory Valencia
- C. Christian Jimenez
- D. Alfredo Baltazar

Season-ending injuries are those that keep a player out for the rest of the season, not just for a few games or weeks. When the text signals that a player cannot continue for the year—using language like “out for the season” or “season-ending”—that identifies a true season-ending injury. In this item, Felix Gonzales is the player described as unable to continue for the rest of the year due to injury, so he is the one who suffered a season-ending injury. The other players would be described with shorter recovery timelines or return-to-play plans, not ending the season.

8. What is the overarching theme of the chapters covering the playoffs and championship?

- A. The Value of Team Sports for Identity Formation and the Benefits of Deafness in Football
- B. The Role of Coaches in Championship Runs
- C. The Economics of Deaf Athletes
- D. The History of Sign Language in Sports

Playoffs and championships are moments that reveal how a team's identity is built through shared effort, trust, and overcoming pressure. The chapters use these high-stakes games to show how players come to see themselves as part of something larger than themselves and how that sense of belonging strengthens as the team fights toward a common goal. The Deafness angle isn't about separate issues; it shapes how the team communicates, coordinates, and supports one another, turning nonverbal cues and shared experiences into strengths that influence performance and group cohesion. This makes the broader theme about values of team sport for identity formation while highlighting how Deafness in football can contribute unique advantages to teamwork, rather than focusing on coaches, economic aspects, or the history of sign language.

9. What was the halftime score of the championship game, and what was the final score?

- A. Halftime score was 30-20; final score was 70-40.
- B. Halftime score was 22-18; final score was 68-50.
- C. Halftime score was 50-2; final score was 80-26.
- D. Halftime score was 42-12; final score was 80-26.

Understanding halftime and final scores comes down to how the score progresses after the break. To verify a given pair, subtract what teams had at halftime from what they have at the end to see the second-half scoring. For the option with a halftime tally of 42 for the first team and 12 for the second, the final score of 80-26 works out to 38 more points for the first team and 14 more for the second team in the second half. Those increments are both nonnegative and add up to the total scoring after halftime, so this pairing is internally consistent and plausible as the progression of a championship game.

10. What was the outcome of the Cubs' semifinal playoff game?

- A. The Cubs lost to Flintridge Prep.
- B. The Cubs tied with Flintridge Prep.
- C. The Cubs defeated Flintridge Prep 58-28.
- D. The Cubs defeated Faith Baptist 58-28.

The key idea is identifying the actual matchup and result that defines the semifinal. The Cubs won the semifinal by defeating Flintridge Prep with a score of 58-28. This exactly matches a decisive win that would advance them to the final, which is what a semifinal outcome represents. The other options either describe a loss, a tie, or the same score against a different opponent, which doesn't fit the described semifinal matchup.
